* PRAYER OF CONFESSION

Everlasting God, we admit that we see the world with dim eyes, with closed hearts, and with unimaginative faith. We do not expect your Spirit to surprise us, and we do not hope for the gospel to transform us. We have been content with the status quo when it serves us well, and have been fearful about a future that is not in our control. Forgive us, holy God, and feed our souls where we are most in need. Grant us courage to serve our neighbor with humility, to welcome our neighbor with hospitality, and to love our neighbor as Christ first loved us. We ask it all through Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

Leader: Friends, believe the good news of the gospel.
People: In Jesus Christ we are forgiven.

REFLECTION ON ACTS 11:1-18

My favorite time of the day is that last hour or so before sleep overcomes my weakening grip on consciousness. I cherish the silence that pervades my otherwise bustling household. The softened shadows cast from dimly lit lamps throughout the house are a welcome contrast to the barrage of cold, industrial light that illuminates my workplace. It is during this time, usually in the comfort of my bed, that I spend the last moments of the day with a Kindle in my hand and Foster-Grants over my nose. I love to read. Historical titles, nonfiction and the like always capture my attention.

Knowing this about me, you would be inclined to think that reading the Bible would be "right up my alley." The Bible is not up my alley. As far as readability, I find it to be among the most difficult works of literature ever composed. My ignorance of the vernacular, historical context, and geographical setting greatly hinders my search for the message conveyed in each passage. Furthermore, since the Bible has numerous authors, honing in on the writers style proves to be unhelpful in my attempt to decipher scripture.

In Acts:1-18, the apostle Luke tells the story of Peter as he is being reproached by other apostles and high ranking members of the Jewish faith for having shared in a meal with a group of Gentiles. The assumption on the part of the apostles and non-Gentiles was that the Gentiles were not pure enough in the Jewish faith to receive the salvation offered by Christ. It would seem that this is the precise moment in the Bible where Christianity went from being a "sect" of the Jewish faith to an altogether different religion. Of course, beyond the span of 2000 years, if we are to know only one thing about Christianity, it is that Christ offers eternal life to all who believe in Him.

And yet, 2000 years later, we see examples of the same zealotry described by Luke within our own faith, in our own town. I am proud to be a part of a church that does not exclude (in any possible way) individuals whose lifestyle, views, or actions (past and present) do not "qualify" them as being "pure" in their faith. I am thankful we have church leaders who have spent most of the waking hours of their adult lives in the pursuit to explore, decode, understand, and most importantly...teach all that the Bible offers to individuals whom, like me, find its interpretation as elusive as that chocolate-frosted, sprinkle-coated Krispy Kreme after a ten o'clock summer service.
